Gucci, Prada, Fendi,...and Rivkah? Bravo's Real Housewives may have competition from some wholesome, bible-abiding counterparts. Think less acrylic nail cat-fights, and more palms pressed in prayer.

Ty Adams, evangelical author and CEO of Heaven Enterprises, has produced a straight-to-DVD series, 'Real Housewives of the Bible', following six women as they face the trials and tribulations of becoming a good wife.

"Housewives" featured include Sarah, who famously struggled with infertility, and Delilah, who used the age-old tool of seduction to trick Samson.

While Bravo's 'Real Housewives of Beverly Hills' are hardly credible role models (but fabulous for a TiVo guilty pleasure), can we expect women of the Bible to provide any less drama or examples of bad behavior?

Sarah, Rivkah, Rachel, and Leah are golden examples of righteous women. But let's be serious. Even just a preliminary rundown of Bible 101 includes Eve, Jezebel, and Lot's daughters. If the 'Real Housewives of the Bible' ever want to make it prime time, they'll need to show the good with the bad. (See Janet Rosenberg's take on Jewish women of the Bible.) Here's hoping for an appearance of Athaliah.
